Joanna Gypser, about to release debut single „Piece of my heart“

Labeled „The Celine Dion of Jazz“ by German Jazz label boss Frank Nagel-Heyer, Joanna Gypser is releasing her first single „Piece of your heart“ this spring. Though Joanna has problems with the comparison, it does fit thanks to her clear and distinctive voice. But Joanna’s world is not jazz, it’s pop. Her debut single is a smooth, melodic and catchy ballad that is going to stick around.

Moreover it is very personal since the lyrics stem from a painful experience. „The song came out of a feeling I had during my father’s terminal illness” the young singer says. „When he then died the song became very personal and now it has a special meaning for me.“

Interesting is the lyric’s perspective. Unlike other songs that deal with pain and loss, the perspective is not from the person that remains but from the one departing, and his message is encouragement and hope for the future.

Joanna Gypser puts a lot of care and consideration into her songwriting. She has the advantage of being a professionally trained piano player and has access to a studio that belongs to her husband Florian Gypser.

„Piece of my heart“ is her first release - and quite a remarkable one.

So it is no surprise that the experienced studio singer took the opportunity to leave the studio and step into the lime light. However, when you listen to „Piece of your heart“ for the first time you wonder why she didn’t do it earlier.
